12/31/2006 norman r. morrow, principal investigator stimulating naturally fractured carbonate reservoirs - naturally fractured carbonate reservoirs can be difficult to stimulate because treatment fluids tend to enter the fractures and avoid less permeable regions. effective fluid diversion techniques are usually necessary to ensure that stimulation fluids contact the largest possible reservoir surface area. engineers and chemists reservoir engineering aspects of unconventional reservoirs ... - additional energy to the reservoir. secondary recovery methods entail injecting either water and (or) natural gas into the reservoir for repressurizing and (or) pressure maintenance and to potentially act as a water and (or) gas drive to displace oil. this helps to sustain higher production rates and extends the productive life of the reservoir. reservoir engineering for geologists coalbed methane ... - a straight line in a conventional reservoir (figure 3), the depletion profile in a cbm reservoir is distinctly non-linear. for a given pressure drop, a cbm reservoir will desorb significantly more gas when the starting reservoir pressure is low compared to when reservoir pressure is high (figure 4).
